Cold Weather = Hearty Cooking... and Wines to go with it.

Now that cold weather is approaching, I always look forward to hearty comfort food. Steak, roasts, braised meats and stews all start finding their way onto the menu at my house. The accompanying wines become bigger and bolder, with more structure and backbone, and red becomes the color of choice for the next several months.

If I'm contemplating splurging for a prime rib roast, then I want to get a wine that's in the same league. The marbled fat in the roast calls for a tannic wine. Tannin and fat have a marvelous symbiotic relationship where the tannins cut through the fat and the fat softens the tannin and clears the palate. Wines that are perfect here are Cabernet Sauvignon, Brunello di Montalcino, or Bordeaux.

Cabernet Sauvignon is the perfect steak wine. The tannin and bold flavor pairs so well with the flavor profile of the steak, especially if it is coming off the grill. The char from the grill marries beautifully with the tannin especially if the meat is well marbled such as in a ribeye or New York strip. Some of my favorite affordable cabernets are Mazzocco, Martini Napa, Daou, and Alexander Valley Vineyards. If I want to splurge, Frank Family, Faust and Stag's Leap Cellars are some of my top choices.

Another good choice for a steak or a roast is a Bordeaux, especially from the Left Bank where the usual Cabernet/Merlot blend is more Cab dominant. Good examples are Chateau Castera, and any wine from St Estephe, Margaux or Haut Medoc appellations.

If you want something different from the usual, try one of my favorites, Aglianico. This is a very ancient grape from the Campagna and Basilicata regions of southern Italy. Nicknamed the "Barolo of the South", this is big, tannic, rustic and full of flavors of plum, berries, leather, coffee and chocolate. It can age for decades. Feudi San Gregorio Aglianico Rubrato is an affordable, yet delicious example.

Brunello di Montalcino is one of the world's greatest wines, and has become possibly my favorite of all time. It is made in Tuscany and is 100% Sangiovese Grosso. The wine legally must be aged for at least 4 years in oak and bottle, with at least 2 of those years in oak. Upon release the wines are quite tannic and will continue to soften and evolve over years. Beautiful red fruit, earthiness and vanilla peek through the tannins and become more lush with age. Brunello usually starts in the high 40's and goes up to hundreds of dollars so make sure to consult one of Wyatt's Wet Goods wine experts, for the best deals and best vintages to make sure you get the best bang for your buck. A couple of my favorite Brunello's are Piancornello & Mocali. Poggio Scuderi is excellent for the price. I've seen it on sale in the store for $39.99. If you are going to splurge on a wine, this is the varietal you should consider pulling the trigger on if you're planning a special meal of steak, roast or braised meat. Speaking for myself, one of the most spectacular culinary experiences I've ever known was sitting in a Tuscan restaurant last spring and having the classic Bistecca alla Fiorentina with a great Brunello

Another Italian wine that is a wonderful match with beef, especially braised or roasted, is another Italian powerhouse. Barolo hails from Piedmont, in northern Italy and is made from the Nebbiolo grape. Wine production of this wine is perhaps the strictest in the world. The grape must be grown in one of the 11 communes of the appellation of Barolo. The vineyards must be planted on a hillside. If grown on flat ground the wine is relegated to being called Langhe Nebbiolo. The vines must be at planted at elevation between 540 meters and 170 meters. Production must be limited to 8 tons per hectare. The wine must be aged for a minimum of 38 months including at least 18 months in oak or chestnut. Riservas must be aged for at least 62 months, with at least 18 months being in barrel. The resulting wine is powerful and complex with a characteristic nose of tar and roses. Flavors of licorice and dried fruit mellow with aging merging with black pepper, cinnamon, juniper berry dark chocolate espresso and sweet tobacco. The interesting thing about Barolo is despite the massive structure, complexity and flavor profile, the wine is medium bodied and quite light in color, making it especially inviting with braised meat.

Nebbiolo is notoriously rich in tannins. The wine benefits from long aging for these tannins to mellow and soften, developing sophisticated nuances. It is advisable to keep Barolo for at least five years from harvest and it can last for decades. Some of my favorites are made by Brovia, G.D Vajira, Pio Cesare, and Renato Ratti. Be prepared to spend a handsome sum, but it will be an experience to remember.

We have been speaking mainly about beef dishes, although all these wines work well with game or lamb, either roasted, braised or stewed. But when considering lamb there are two regions that produce wines that are the perfect match for this winter meal. The Cotes du Rhone region in France and the Rioja region of Spain are both known for large number of sheep and lambs running around and for delicious wines that, not surprisingly, are wonderful accompaniments to lamb dishes. The major grape in wines from Rioja is Tempranillo, often blended with Cabernet, Grenache or Graciano. The earthiness in the wines, along with tannic structure and complexity work extremely well with the earthiness of lamb. Great ones to look for come from Marques de Caceres, Hermanos Pecina, Cune, Marques De Riscal, and Muga.

The wines from the Cotes du Rhone are made mostly from Syrah and Grenache, although there are over a dozen varietals allowed to be contained in the most famous wine from the region, Chateauf du Pape. These wines are peppery, complex and fruity. They work well with the earthiness of lamb.

The wines from the northern Cotes du Rhone are made purely from Syrah and are quite pricey. I actually like the wines from the south, which contain more grenache and more affordable. Chateauf du Pape is one of the great wines of France, ranking with Bordeaux and Burgundy. They tend to be complex and structured with beautiful red fruit. They are the most expensive of the southern Cotes du Rhone wines, but they are worth it. Excellent makers of Cotes du Rhone wines to look for are Paul Jaboulet, St Cosme, Guigal, and Chapoutier. The best wines from Chateauf du Pape include, Jaboulet, Demail Pegau, Vieux Telegraph, and Domaine du Vieux Lazaret.

Although red wines dominate the winter season, some mention of whites is warranted. After all, if you're planning a chicken or seafood dinner, Barolo would be a bit much. During this time of year, I turn to Chardonnay, Chenin Blanc, Alsatian Reisling and Gewurztraminer. These wines are full bodied and flavorful, so these dishes should be created to match.

Cold winter nights call for hearty, flavorful dinners. These dinners, in turn, require big, hearty wines. Hopefully, these winter wine suggestions will help make your cold weather cooking a true adventure.
